Description:

This activity has been designed to assist in preparing nurses who practice in the school or other pediatric setting to improve their assessment skills as they relate to common rashes seen in children. Nuisance, viral, fungal and bacterial induced rashes will be discussed as well as common red flag assessment findings that should result in referral to either primary care or dermatology. Finally, management and other appropriate treatment options for pediatric rashes will also be reviewed.

Desired Outcome:

Participants of this activity will be able to identify at least two rationales that determine when pediatric patients with rashes need further assessment by primary care or dermatology and they will be able to discuss common assessment findings that are considered red flags.

Target Audience:

Pediatric RN's, School Nurses, and other health professionals interested in this topics.
